Jessy Lyon & Family

Jessy Lyon became ill the week of July 1, 2009. Her family was on vacation in Northern California and Jessy became so ill that she had to go to the local emergency room. The doctors could not figure out what was wrong with Jessy, but after discovering a high white blood cell count, she was transported to Sutter Memorial Hospital in Sacramento. Once there, despite multiple medical tests and physician consultations, Jessy continued to deteriorate. Jessy's first symptoms were fever and a headache. By July 4th, Jessy did not recognize anyone and she could not speak clearly. On July 5th, Jessy fell unconscious and her heart rate became erratic.

Jessy stayed at Sutter Memorial Hospital for a month until she was stable enough to be life flighted back to Oregon to be treated at OHSU in Portland. Upon arrival, she was in the intensive care unit for two weeks where she continued to fight for her life while her body struggled with thalamic storming, fever and seizures. Jessy's heart continued to beat irregularly, from 10 beats per minute to 225 beats per minute. Because she could not breathe, she was on life support. Finally, at the end of August, Jessy was diagnosed with Anti-NMDA Receptor Encephalitis. She was the first child in Oregon to be diagnosed with this form of encephalitis. After diagnosis, Jessy received various treatments including plasma exchange, steroid treatments, IVIGG treatments, and Retuximab chemotherapy. At the end of August 2009, Jessy was transferred to Legacy Emanuel Children's Hospital and remained there until March 1, 2010. After her release from Legacy, Jessy was stable enough to transfer to a nursing facility. But her family wanted Jessy home. They were able to take Jessy home with the assistance of a registered nurse and 24 hour support.

Two weeks before Christmas, her family was told that Jessy would be in a vegetative state the rest of her life. A week later, Jessy tried to stand from her hospital bed and take a step. Since becoming ill, Jessy had been fed through a g-tube in her stomach. But every day, Jessy is eating more food by mouth and loves McDonald's cheeseburgers. Jessy has been continuously getting better at walking, communicating, and recovering memories. Jessy is an inspiration to everyone and is living proof that miracles do come true. Thank you for all of your prayers, support, and well wishes.
